Regarding the removal of trees and the new apartment building on Orchard and East 15th Avenue, 12 mature trees were removed. Will this be another Capstone project, which is widely regarded to have been a debacle with minimal plantings and inadequate setbacks from the street? Is anyone from the city monitoring this?

LOVE NOT WRATH

Regarding Lon Miller's letter, "God's Wrath," of June 30, 2016: Lon Miller, with your medieval Biblical thinking, beware you throw stones. You may go down the "Drain." We have been married for 27 years and have yet to become "perverts and deviants." It is your deviant thinking that causes hatred and "stone-throwing" in this world. Someone must have torn the pages out of your Bible where Jesus speaks of love and compassion.

EXPLAIN TRAGEDY

satisfactory evidence to purport that Orlando's mass murder is, in fact, no other than the modern day equivalent of Sodom and Gomorrah.

Perhaps Lon can thumb his Bible a bit longer and proffer a verse or two that explains his God's wrath in regard to another Miller Family: a Christian family of six who recently were all but exterminated in a horrific train accident in rural Colorado. An extremely tragic event that claimed the lives of the mother, father as well as three young daughters on their way to church. One daughter, 4 years old, was the sole survivor.

This is in response to what I would call a hate mail letter to pit bulls.

Anyone interested in pit bulls, bulldogs, dogs and the human-animal relationship would be smart to read a book called Bandit: Dossier of a Dangerous Dog. The author, Vicky Hearne (now deceased), was a nationally known dog and horse trainer, but a poet and philosopher as well who taught for a time at Yale. To quote from the cover, this book is a "dramatic report from the front lines of the 'pit bull wars,' is a penetrating inquiry into the appropriate relations between animals and the human world, a song of praise for the 'dance of friendship' between animals and people, and a hell of a dog story."

"Hearne brings a poet's keen eye, a philosopher's supple mind and a trainer's true knowledge of dogs to the issues surrounding Bandit's case and her three-year battle to snatch him from the jaws of the judicial system. Witty, fiercely intelligent, eloquent, Bandit is essential reading for anyone who cares about animal happiness and human justice."

The library has this book.

One thing — because Hearne is a philosopher, there are occasional rambles into that territory. Just persevere. It is worth it.

CORPORATE LOGGING

The BLM is working hard to increase logging on our federal public forests in western Oregon by 37 percent. This is exactly the opposite direction we should be going in light of global warming, mass species extinction and the need to protect our quality drinking water. Why would they be doing this, you ask? They are pressured by the legislators who are given large amounts of money via campaign donations by the logging industry and are using the archaic O&C Act of 1937 as the reason.

We should be having an "all hands on deck" attitude to save our public forests here, as they are one of the best in the world for carbon sequestration and important habitat for wildlife. Our forests are a key component to mitigating the global warming crisis. It is no exaggeration to state that all life on Earth depends on us to give our energy and focus to save our forests and oceans, transition off of fossil fuels, localize food systems and build resilient and truly sustainable communities.

SELF GOVERNMENT

No doubt, there is something stirring among the citizenry of this country. People are starting to react to the malaise of alienation, insignificance and hopelessness that the consumer, corporate-owned culture has used to colonize our minds.

Example one: Although blasted by the media as a movement that couldn't articulate its goals, the occupy movement

VIEWPOINT BY PAUL NICHOLSON

Accountability Is the Real Problem

Here we go again — up to 30 more years of urban renewal, because "the city concludes that the entire urban renewal area is blighted." After 48 years and approximately $130 million (surely over a quarter of a billion dollars adjusted for inflation), the total taxable valuation of all of the property in the district is not even equal to the inflation-adjusted tax money we have poured into it.

Urban renewal's failure, however, is not the cause of the ineffectiveness of Eugene's city government, nor is it the only or the most important betrayal of the public interest.

To understand Eugene politics, one must contemplate just how upside-down city governance has become. In theory, elected councilors bring the priorities of the community to the table and the manager administers council's direction.

In Eugene, the city manager does the politics, and council appears unconcerned about public support for the manager's agenda. This state of affairs is not so much the fault of our elected officials as it is the inevitable result of a charter that endows the manager with way too much power.

When I was elected to Eugene City Council in the early 1990s, then Councilor Shawn Boles warned me that councilors were like mushrooms "kept in the dark and fed manure." Council's real influence on Eugene's civic affairs is so minimal that most council seats are uncontested. City councilors are not even given an office!

I want to highlight the negative results of the power imbalance in our peculiar version of the city manager form of government. In short, our city government is by its nature unaccountable, wasteful and indifferent to the priorities of the citizens.

Here are two examples of projects that are despised by the public, yet sanctioned by our docile council despite public outrage. You can see that the Urban Renewal scam is chump change compared to the cost of these unloved projects.

Police palace Despite two citizen advisory exercises which urged that police headquarters remain downtown near City Hall, City Manager Ruiz inexplicably purchased a forlorn white elephant, for Eugene's "new" police headquarters — total budget $35 million for the building and its remodeling. The new police facility is several times the size of the old digs.

City Hall fiasco The City Council commissioned a study of the cost of refurbishing our existing, award-winning mid-century modern City Hall. The highest estimate to refurbish our iconic City Hall was $12 million. The manager and his minions attacked the work of their own consultant and pressured council to approved a new $15 million City Hall. The price tag has already risen to $25 million and still climbing. Once again, citizen input overwhelmingly supported refurbishing the existing historic City Hall.

And then there is a second strategy for avoiding any meaningful public discussion of our revenue priorities — indirect subsidies of private projects. Consider these two examples:

MUPTE project Student housing projects such as Capstone (13th and Olive) not only received 10-year tax exemptions, but also received all sorts of other indirect benefits from the city. For example, Capstone was permitted to start construction without permits and to ignore design standards that would be imposed on local developers. So far, we have forgone about $2,110,000 in taxes.

Of course, as time passes, and more MUPTE projects are built, this number will balloon. Who will ever build an apartment complex on his own dime now that Ruiz set this awful precedent?

Sweetheart deals For example, during Jon Ruiz's first three years at the helm in Eugene, the city's rent expense increased from $665,631 to $1,431,442, an increase of more than $775,000 annually. City offices were moved out of their existing market rate office space into the new urban renewal subsidized office space, not only massively increasing the city's rent bill, but even paying the developers for all unrented space.

These examples are truly the tip of the iceberg.

Ending the urban renewal slush fund would be a good start, but would not, by itself, fix Eugene's broken politics. Council should have kept its word and closed the Downtown Urban Renewal District. But still more importantly, our council and mayor should be required to refer to the voters any action that subsidizes private development or funds a major capital improvement. Your property taxes should fund basic city services unless you, the folks who pay the bills, give the city bureaucracy permission to use your money for some other purpose.

Paul Nicholson is a former Eugene city councilor, and the founder of Paul's Bicycle Way of Life.

THIS MODERN WORLD

couldn't have done better.

Anyone who hears of "the one percent" or "Main Street vs. Wall Street" understands those references perfectly.

Example two: Today we have Bernie Sanders advancing the understanding of people's rights vs. the corporatocracy.

Example three: Although gravely misguided, the "Trump-ets" are a significant population who recognize that they are not being treated fairly and want economic security that they justly deserve.

At home here in Lane County, the fight is being waged by the people to establish and secure our basic lawful rights of choice and democratic self-determination. Community Rights Lane County (CRLC, communityrightslanecounty.org) has for three years been trying to get a charter amendment on the ballot that would secure our rights to local self-governance.

Finally, although obstructed by endless corporate money and $600-an-hour corporate lawyers, petitioners managed to get the "Freedom from Aerial Spray" charter amendment and the "Right to a Local Self-Government" charter amendment ready for signature collection. If the corporate push-back is any indicator, the value of these laws to our rights is huge.

Although our strength lies on the grassroots, local level, this is not a single issue campaign. The structure of law must change so profit is not the sole priority above the access of the people to health, justice and security.

TOW TRUCK HERO

On June 20, there was a house fire at a home in the Skinner Butte area on 2nd Street, near High. A passing tow truck driver was the first person to alert the authorities of the house fire, and he also aided in the rescue of a person sleeping in a slightly detached back studio.

It was impossible to walk down the side of the house because of the flames, so he went down the alley and tore down a section of the fence (using either a crowbar or his body) to get to the sleeping tenant's door.

Our neighborhood community would like to give a shoutout of gratitude to this unknown man (he left as soon as the firefighters arrived). We would also like to thank the firefighters. When you wake up at 1:30 am to your next-door neighbor's house on fire, then see the courageous firefighters show up, who then put it out, you give thanks for living in a community that has such services.

REMEMBER THE BASTILLE

As we all know, Donald Trump's campaign promise to "make America great again" includes a proposal to build a wall along the U.S./Mexico border — an idea as arrogant and divisive as it is ludicrous and impractical.

There is absolutely nothing to gain from such an offensive display of misguided thinking. Political history well documents the failure of similar structures — dismal and shameful remnants of the failed policies of exclusion and isolationism.

Consider the infamous legacies of such walls as Jericho, Berlin and The Bastille. They represent painful reminders of fear, oppression and racism — all constructs of despotism and autocracies. All eventually came tumbling down, breached and broken by the forces of revolt and revolution — conquered by the ideals of true greatness and freedom.

Under the guise of national or ethnic security, the foundation for those walls were cast in oppression and prejudice — walls of fear, secrecy, retreat and imprisonment. America was founded by immigrants, all seeking the opportunities offered by freedom and the promise of a better way of life. Walls were not the answer then, and they are not the answer now. Let us not leave Trump's wall as such an embarrassing legacy. True greatness knows no bounds.

To paraphrase Jimi Hendrix, "Castles made of sand, drift into the sea eventually."

STOP SUICIDE

in our country [Letters, June 16]. She cites a problem — suicide — and proposes a way to begin to solve it. Her letter is part one. Part two is calling us to action to help make a difference, telling her story in D.C. She even provides a phone number. Each of us can make a difference. Preventing suicide is an important issue; ending hunger is as well. In a country where one in five children are not sure where their next meal is coming from, Congress is considering cutting the SNAP program, formerly called food stamps. Also, the Reach Every Mother and Child Act, targeting ending millions of preventable deaths in our world, is stalled in committee. So make a call about one of these important issues or send an email to your representatives. Congress is depending on us to show them the way to a better world.

ATTACK ON DEMOCRACY

Our Community, Our Rights just received a big win in court that protects our right to the initiative process. The majority of Lane County Commissioners, in conflict with Judge Carlson's June 3 ruling, is seeking to nullify it. This entire initiative review process is unconstitutional. The constitutional right of initiative belongs to the people, not the whims of elected officials. The "matters of county concern" argument these commissioners refer to is a Trojan Horse. It provides an excuse to attack the substance of any initiative before the people have spoken. Initiatives are the people's business. This action by the commissioners is an attack on direct democracy. It's time to get involved, Lane County. Join us in protecting our constitutional right to the ballot box at communityrightslanecounty.org.

VIEWPOINT

BY GEORGE WUERTHNER

Thinning Is Snake Oil

DON'T BUILD HOMES IN THE 'FIRE PLAIN'

In a recent review article about forest thinning and its effectiveness to reduce wildfire severity and spread in Forest Ecology and Management, the researchers came to a conclusion with regards to reducing fire risk and effects that "thinning alone had either less of an effect or none at all, compared to untreated sites."

The study did conclude that thinning followed by at least one, (but better two) prescribed burn treatments is generally effective at reducing fire risk. And if you can only do one thing, prescribed burning is more cost-effective at reducing fires than thinning/logging alone. However, both the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management tend to spend far more money and effort on logging the forest than on prescribed burning.

There are a host of reasons for this. There is strong pressure from the timber industry on the federal government to provide more subsidized timber sales on federal lands. Plus, due to the lack of transparencies on the part of the Forest Service and other agencies, you seldom hear anyone admitting that thinning/logging has been proven to be largely ineffective at reducing fire risks.

Plus, most thinning/logging operations have other collateral damage like soil compaction, disturbance of wildlife, the spread of weeds and road construction, which fragments forests and causes sedimentation of streams. These are the "externalized costs" of logging that are seldom counted in the "cost"/benefit of a timber sale.

Even without considering these externalized costs, most federal timber sales lose money — another fact that the federals are loath to admit or try to justify by claiming that logging will reduce wildfire risk. But as this and other recent studies conclude, thinning alone is rarely effective in accomplishing this goal.

The effects of fuel reduction are usually negated in three to 10 years by new growth of fine fuels — fallen needles, shrubs, small trees and so forth. And while there's money for logging/thinning, there's less available to do the maintenance. So even if effective immediately after treatment, the effectiveness declines rapidly.

However, even if federal agencies shifted emphasis to more burning than logging, the other unacknowledged fact is that all fuel treatments, while they may work occasionally to slow or control blazes under moderate fire weather conditions, usually won't stop the large fires burning under severe fire weather that are the real threat to western communities.

Severe fire weather conditions include drought, high temperatures, low humidity and, most importantly, high winds. If you have high winds, you cannot effectively control a blaze.

Ironically, most fires burning under low to moderate fire weather conditions will self-extinguish or are easily controlled. However, under severe fire weather, nothing works. Thinning and prescribed burning usually fail to alter the outcome for the largest fires burning under severe fire weather.

Also, most forests burning at high severity are higher elevation, moister forest types like lodgepole pine, spruce or fir that have very long fire return intervals, and it may be decades or even centuries before they burn, making any fuel reductions useless since trees would grow back before any fire encounters the fuel reductions.

Plus, large high-severity fires are critical to healthy forest ecosystems. Severe fires provide a major input of woody debris that maintains spawning beds for salmon and trout. They provide structural components (snags) that are valuable for birds and mammals for feeding and homes (cavities). Burned forests also store carbon and nutrients. Ecologically speaking, thinning impoverishes our forest ecosystems, while large wildfires enrich them.

Of course, no one wants to see a home or community threatened by wildfire, but we don't have to destroy our forest ecosystems with logging to protect our homes. Don't build any new homes in the "fire plain" on the edge of town.

For those homes already constructed in the wrong places, reducing the flammability of homes is proven highly effective. Metal roofs, screened roof vents, removal of flammable materials around the base of the house and building a modest wall that can keep surface fires from burning to the edge of a home, are only a few of the proven methods that can save a home from wildfire.

And yes, even some moderate thinning and prescribed burning immediately adjacent to the home and on the edge of the community can be useful — but only if these fuel treatments are regularly maintained and strategically done.

The idea that you can preclude large wildfires through forest-wide thinning is snake oil, very expensive snake oil. And not only does the taxpayer pay for ineffective fire protection, but we degrade our forest ecosystems in the process.

George Wuerthner is an ecologist who has published 38 books, including two dealing with wildfire ecology.

NOTES FROM THE RIVERSIDE

BY MARK HARRIS

Toward a New Country

In between these massacres and the next

I want my country back. I want the country where “All My Relations” meant an expanded humanity that lives in kinship with other life forms as relatives, not resources. That recognizes that humans in particular are relatives to be nurtured and cared for, not resources to be enslaved or exploited. When enslavement, exploitation or terror happens, that the solution to oppression is to become more humane than your oppressors.

It’s partially the country that existed before 1491: pyramid cities, intercontinental and interracial trade and commerce. Though slavery and war were not unknown here before Columbus, we found ways towards civilized resolution through remembering our common strengths and gifts.

It’s not the country or culture that would build a Walmart outside those pyramid cities, nor where a U.S. corporation could claim ownership of rainfall in Bolivia.

The country that came after that was predicated on a certain type of violence. The targets were indigenous people and their demonstrated allies from other continents, which included historically respectful Europeans. The country that practiced and practices massacres, lynchings, concentration camps and other forms of sociostructural violence must fade into historical memory before my country will emerge.

I asked Robert Kono, at the time a local veteran (442nd) and survivor of the concentration camps, why would you fight for a country that incarcerated you because of your race while allowing major corporations to trade and profit from doing business with the enemy Nazi Germany? He said he didn’t fight for politicians or his family, or the soldiers next to him (all Japanese-Americans). He’s fighting for an America that doesn’t exist yet, that would never do the things that happened to him and others. If he doesn’t fight for it now, it will never exist.

I could pledge allegiance to that America. It’s a kind of a dual consciousness: remembering better, experiencing worse and working for better in the face of worse. Being a mandatory reporter for a system I wouldn’t entrust a single blood relative to, unmonitored. Supporting institutions that regularly betray you, and your kind, and that kind is continually expanding.

It’s not so much where or who will perpetrate the next attack. I come from a people to whom the state was the main perpetrator, or allowed the attacks to happen. Electing a black president (who’s received more death threats than all the white presidents combined) didn’t change that.

Improved technology for killing, without deepened humanity, means that a single person, normally socialized, can kill as many people as a state. The worst massacres were state sponsored or facilitated: Washita (103); Sand Creek (163); Fort Pillow (300); The Red Summer (293); Tulsa Black Wall Street (3,000); and Rosewood, Florida (150).

Dylann Roof was following an American tradition: internally hating yourself, then externally hating others. Omar Mateen was saying, “I don’t have a problem with black people ... You guys suffered enough,” while killing people of color, including black people. Killing people of color while being a person of color is displaying a sort of mental illness commonly undiagnosed in America, racial self-hatred, with gender identity dysphoria. (According to the American Psychological Association, internalized racism doesn’t exist).

If he was taught to hate himself and natural aspects of his being, with no healthy resolution for the inner turmoil, then no amount of FBI background checks could predict or prevent Mateen’s attacks. In fact, the healing could occur from within the community he targeted, just like Dylann Roof.

Communities that suffer in the absence of healing from the mainstream must and have developed their own healing ways, individually, then collectively becoming more humane than their attackers and the society that generates their attackers. How would one become a healthy gay Muslim man, or a recovered white supremacist?

Not through cognitive behavioral therapy and antidepressants. Such healing ways were once widespread in my country, embedded in the culture, as it were. They were largely suppressed by this country. There needs to be, and is, a more vigorous resurgence.

For a new country to emerge, backlash is predictable, but resistance is fertile.

GRIN AND PRETEND

It is amazing how a couple of years can completely change a person's opinion. I voted for Mayor Kitty Piercy twice before I realized that she is just another expensive, backroom, crony-serving politician. Under her leadership, votes have been changed (parkland funds to overpaying for Civic Stadium and ignoring a past vote about urban renewal termination date) and repeatedly labeled unnecessary and denied (City Hall and urban renewal).

No public notice was given that Kesey Square was being sold by our city manager/manipulator to one of his acquaintances.

I thought he was to supposed to follow City Council's directions. Who gave him those instructions? Wouldn't a public sale generate more money for the city than with a secret deal? Define corruption for me again.

Then the mayor starts up about the travelers. Just another ordinary political action to help the sale.

Use the homeless when it makes you look good. Use the homeless when you can manipulate the public.

I have read two glowing letters lately with regards to Mayor Piercy's leadership.

For me, the Piercy/Ruiz leadership is best described as arrogant, manipulative, secretive and heavy handed, with very little need for open and honest government.

Remember, Piercy and five of her minions on the City Council wanted to suppress Ruiz's latest amateur and adolescent actions regarding the construction of City Hall.

Seven out of 10 city (five of eight councilors) leaders wanted to keep public information from the public. At least we have three open and honest councilors. Much thanks to Councilor Brown for exposing the truth.

Mayor Piercy was upset about the councilor's honesty. Mayor, continue to grin and pretend that you are not what you are.

SENECA AD

I find it peculiar that Seneca Jones would pay more than $1,000 to advertise in the paper, not even to sell anything but just to talk about how great they are. Let's clear a few things up. Planting monocrop tree farms in no way remedies clear cutting, or cutting down old growth and native forests.

It does not matter if you plant more than you cut. When you cut down a forest and destroy an ecosystem, you cannot just replant it. Monocrop tree farms are causing extreme damage to the environment. The fertilizers used are polluting waterways, massive amounts of topsoil are eroded, the weak immune systems of the plantations host pest and disease infestations and the dry drought conditions that prevail in this monoculture system are responsible for hosting fires that burn very hot and move fast.

Regardless if your "tree farms clean the air of the annual CO2 emissions from 86, 169 vehicles," your pollution from your horrid logging practices, mill and dirty biomass plant alone releases an estimated 17,900 pounds of air toxins into West Eugene neighborhoods annually — this in addition to the 73,000 pounds already released annually from the mill itself. Seneca Biomass failed its first EPA air pollution test and yet sued the state for extra money to offset the expenses of building the plant. There are three schools within 3 miles of the Seneca Biomass facility and asthma rates in the area are almost twice the levels of the rest of Eugene.

Seneca Jones has been called out many times for its repeated greenwashing and false claims. For more information, check out Cascadia Forest Defenders. In the wise words of leading youth activists from the Earth Guardians, "Put down the axe for the future generations, restore our ancient forests, that's reforestation."

TRAIN SOUNDS

I live in the vicinity of Lawrence and Lincoln near Skinner Butte and decry the notion of spending close to $7 million to muffle the sound of the trains. Trains are our history. Trains are romantic. The sound of trains has inspired countless fine songs because trains invoke such rich imagery. Between the sound of 105 and the sound of the trains, please — muffle the highway, not the trains! And do not close the much-used Lawrence Street crossing! I'm actually stunned this proposal is even being considered. I was sitting outside at Cornucopia last week when a train blasted by, and nobody was even fazed. Take that $7 million and buy every kid in town a ticket to the movies and popcorn, or better yet, use it to resurface Lawrence Street between 5th and the park. Don't throw it away on trying to muffle the sound of our history.

FRIENDS OF KESEY SQUARE SEEK TO SAVE DOWNTOWN'S OPEN SPACE

While the furor over the proposed sale of Kesey Square has died down, those who love public spaces have not forgotten that the corner of Broadway and Willamette Street is not officially safe from future development.

A group, Friends of Kesey Square (FOKS), has formed in order to keep Kesey Square firmly in the public domain and to revitalize its use as a downtown space.

One of the first items on FOKS' agenda is to officially rename the square. Cary Thompson, one of FOKS' founders, points out that there are probably one hundred “Broadway Plazas” across the county, but there is only one Kesey Square.

Currently the square's formal title is indeed “Broadway Plaza,” according to the city of Eugene, but the Kesey name came into being in 2003 when local sculptor Pete Helzer's iconic statue of literary luminary Ken Kesey, “The Storyteller,” was placed there.

Kesey Square “speaks to us all and says ‘Hey, you’ve arrived,’” says FOKS member and landscape architect David Dougherty.

Despite the square's use for more than a decade as a public space, the land is still zoned commercial, leaving it in jeopardy of being developed.

In October 2015, the Eugene City Council went into executive session to discuss possibly selling the square to a development group, 2EB LLC (2 East Broadway), to have a mixed-use building with apartments built on it. As word went out, controversy grew. While some saw Kesey Square as an eyesore, many more called for saving Eugene's downtown open space. The city then later put out a call for other ideas for the square.

In response, Eugene businessman Ali Emami, who owns the buildings flanking the square, yet again proposed opening up the square's tall brick walls, a proposal the city has made unworkable in the past by saying it could later revoke the decision to open the walls. A compromise was floated, which Mayor Kitty Piercy called “win-win,” that would have attempted to bring Emami together with 2EB to both keep the plaza open and build apartments, but it did not succeed.

In April, the City Council, in a 5-3 tally, voted down a proposal to prohibit the sale of Kesey Square. Councilors George Brown, Claire Syrett and Betty Taylor were in support of the motion.

As Dougherty told the City Club of Eugene in December,

“It is the responsibility of the building to ‘capture’ and activate the space that it defines.” Dougherty said, “The activities of the buildings must spill out, overflow and mingle with the public space to create the vibrancy that we all desire.”

Kesey is the “heart and soul” of the city, Dougherty tells EW.

Fellow landscape architect Jerry Diethelm says that in order to get a public open space to work, there must be fewer obstacles to those seeking to hold events there. Diethelm says FOKS will look at short-term enhancements to the square. At a June 30 launch and photo session for FOKS, group members pointed to a lack of seating and food carts that could be arranged more invitingly in the space.

Ward 1 City Council candidate and FOKS member Emily Semple says that the goal is for Kesey Square to be a publicly owned plaza, not a park. Eugene parks have curfews, she points out, whereas Kesey Square “is the last remaining place in Eugene where it is legal to practice our First Amendment right to peaceful assembly and free speech between 11 pm and 6 am.”

A public square is not the same as a park, Thompson says, it's a different entity. A square has businesses down the sides it interacts with.

Downtown business owner Jewel Murphy, proprietor of Passionflower on Broadway, says of FOKS, “I am interested in being part of a group that wants Kesey to stay in the public domain and wants to develop a plan involving lots of members of the community that come together in agreement and that does ongoing fundraising to keep Kesey beautiful.”

That statement, Diethelm says, sums up the mission of Friends of Kesey Square.

The group's founding statement says it wishes to officially change the name to Kesey Square, “it will take whatever legal steps are necessary to keep Kesey Square public,” and it seeks to reprogram and redesign the space “in keeping with the imaginative, innovative, adventurous and creative spirit of its namesake storyteller.”

Founding members of FOKS are Murphy, Thompson, Dougherty, Diethelm, Randy McGowan, Gwendolyn Iris and Ruth Miller. ■

CLEANING THE DRINKING WATER

The McKenzie River is home to a diverse collection of wildlife and is also the source of Eugene's drinking water. The 90-mile tributary of the Willamette is home to fish like rainbow trout, spring Chinook and mountain whitefish. Unfortunately, the wildlife, as well as anyone else drinking the water, shares the river with beer cans, mattresses and televisions among other waste that has been dumped into the McKenzie.

The McKenzie Watershed Council (MWC) is hosting its annual McKenzie River cleanup on July 9. The river cleanup will take place from 9 am to 2 pm and a celebration will follow at Hendricks Bridge Wayside in Springfield from 1 to 4 pm. The McKenzie River Guides Association (MRGA) and the McKenzie Flyfishers will cohost the event.

The McKenzie River cleanup has been an annual event for more than 40 years and was started by the MRGA, but MWC has been the main host in recent years.

The McKenzie River is the primary drinking water source for Eugene and is also an indirect water source for Springfield, which gets 90 percent of its drinking water from wells that tap into water from the McKenzie. Springfield plans to use the McKenzie River as a direct drinking water source when its current sources reach capacity, according to the Springfield Utility Board.

The MWC, formed in 1993, is a nonprofit volunteer group that strives to restore and protect the McKenzie River's water quality and wildlife. MWC has an assortment of events, projects and programs throughout the year, like its Salmon Watch program, a children's education program for Lane County students.

"It's critical that we protect the McKenzie," MWC Executive Director Larry Six says.

Volunteers will sign in at Hendricks Bridge Wayside, the event's headquarters, and be directed to their assigned location. Some people will go out on boats, while others will collect trash from the river's shores. Volunteers will cover 80 miles of the McKenzie. Last year's 120 volunteers collected more trash than the Dumpsters could hold, Six says.

"I'm really heartened by the volunteers that are willing to spend their Saturday to come down and help with this," Six tells EW. "It's a labor of love for everybody."

After the cleanup ends, volunteers are invited to a celebratory barbecue from 1 to 4 pm at the cleanup headquarters at Hendricks Bridge. There will be free food, prizes and T-shirts available at the site.

"It's a matter of civic pride to keep a clean, aesthetically pleasing river," Six says.

Go to mckenziawc.org for a list of sections of the river and waysides and boat launches to be cleaned and contact Amanda Wilson at administration@mckenziawc.org or by phone at 458-201-8150 to sign up. Hendricks Bridge is located at 38870 Hendricks Park Road in Springfield. ■

IT'S ABOUT TIME

BY DAVID WAGNER

PIPSISSIWA,
UMBELLATA

By July, gardens are burgeoning with flowers and vegetables. They will thrive through the summer only if we pay diligent attention to adequate watering. Digital hose timers are great for extended trips out of town. We also have to deal with combatting weeds and pests. I wrestle with use of poisons. Slug bait offends my organic sensibilities but it seems the only effective way to keep snails away from our hostas and lilies.

Is it really necessary to use strictly organic fertilizers? Lawn grass can't tell the difference between one source of nitrate or another; fixed nitrogen is fixed nitrogen to a plant. What about the commercial fertilizer additives? Horse manure seems pretty noble at the end of these ruminations.

July is a squirrely month for Willamette Valley urbanites. Can we trap and eliminate fox squirrels humanely? It is not legal to catch and release these arboreal rats to another neighborhood.

The harsh realities of nature show up if we keep eyes open when taking our neighborhood walks. A bushtit nest on the ground reveals predators at work. The little hatchlings don't have a chance once discovered. Crows and jays don't survive on bugs, nuts and berries. A dried and flattened garter snake shows roadkill isn't just a country highway sight.

Escape to the mountains is always good for keeping mental balance with nature. Flower diversity is amazing in the forests and ridgetop meadows. Day hikes are best as high country camping is generally made intolerable by mosquitoes until late August.

COUNTY COMMISSION TARGETS CITIZEN INITIATIVES

On June 28, the Lane County Board of Commissioners discussed giving themselves the power to block certain citizen-powered ballot measures the board deems not of "county concern" before those measures are voted on.

Commissioner Pete Sorenson was the lone dissenting voice on the agenda item labeled "Potential Changes to Lane County Initiative and Referendum Process."

Sorenson tells EW while no actual vote was taken, the "dominant flavor" was to move ahead with an ordinance. He says were the commission to move ahead, he has two questions that he would like answered. First, "Is there a problem?" Sorenson says he doesn't think Lane County has had a lot of problematic local measures.

During the meeting, Josephine County's 2014 ban on growing genetically modified crops that was struck down because it conflicted with Oregon law was pointed out as an example.

Second, Sorenson says there is already a system in place for dealing with local ballot measures that are passed by citizen votes but might have portions of them that are unlawful on a state level or are beyond the scope of the county, and that process throws out nonlegal portions of measures. He calls the proposed ordinance a "solution in search of a problem."

The Josephine County ban was still developing support when, in 2013, the Oregon Legislature essentially banned all GMO bans when it made the state the sole regulator of seeds.

The Josephine County GMO ban passed but was struck down thanks to the state law. If the Lane County Commission succeeds in pushing through this ordinance while local group Community Rights

Lane County is working on two initiatives — one to ban aerial spraying of herbicides and another addressing the community right to self-government — it too will ban a local rights effort while it is still developing.

Sorenson says the ordinance could "suppress rights people currently enjoy," and to change rules on a process that is already under way, such as the Community Rights initiatives, is "frowned upon."

Ann Kneeland, attorney with Community Rights Lane County, says an ironic aspect of the proposed ordinance is that the county commission is targeting Community Rights initiatives that seek to create greater legal authority for citizens to protect themselves from corporate harms.

Kneeland says that "local government is trying to stop the people from engaging in this lawmaking at the behest of corporate interest." She adds, "Here you now have the Lane County Commission doing precisely what the initiatives are trying to prevent."

The initiatives are trying to resurrect the people's authority to protect themselves, Kneeland says. The initiatives are "calling out that government and industry are in bed together."

Kneeland says that the discussion was not an arbitrary act of the board being concerned about the cost of the election. That, she says, is a red herring. "The elephant in our collective room is the government operating at the behest of corporations and not to the benefit of the planet."

Sorenson says if the proposed ordinance goes forward, there would be a public meeting.

Community Rights Lane County meets 8 pm on the first Monday of each month, at the First United Methodist Church, 1376 Olive Street. More information about CRLC can be found at CommunityRightsLaneCounty.org. ■

LOCAL SCIENTIST CREATES KICKSTARTER TO FUND RESEARCH

Roo Vandegrift studies fungi. He recently received his Ph.D. from the University of Oregon and, like hundreds of other scientists, he is in need of money to fund his research.

Scientists usually apply for federal grants, but in Vandegrift's case, he created a Kickstarter campaign for his research on fungi and climate change in Central America.

Vandegrift says there has been an increase in the number of researchers and, according to the National Science Foundation, federal funding for scientific research has declined. Researchers have to compete for grants with funds generally going to the "sexier," more transformative sciences with greater impact, like the medical sciences.

When scientists receive grants, Vandegrift says, the universities usually take a percentage of the money to help keep facilities and programs running. By using a crowd-funding source, Vandegrift says he hopes to demonstrate how important basic sciences are, such as taxonomy, which involves classifying plants and animals based on their similarities.

"The alpha taxonomists are nearing retirement, or nearing death," Vandegrift says, "and there's nobody to replace them because there hasn't been money to train replacements."

Vandegrift's goal is to create a book that helps identify various species of Xylaria, wood decay fungi, commonly known as "Dead Man's Fingers." According to his Kickstarter, "these are some of the most common wood decay fungi in the tropics, which makes them very important to global carbon cycling, and thus climate change."

Crowdfunding for scientific research has not been very successful traditionally since the rewards are more societal and not individual. "Taxonomy might be unique," Vandegrift says. "Because of the graphic nature of taxonomy, and because of the tangible outputs of taxonomic research, I think it has the potential to be the exception to the rule."

Taxonomic research generally includes multiple graphics and pictures documenting the various species within a genus. "Graphics projects do really well with crowdfunding because people like pretty pictures," Vandegrift notes. Thus, the rewards for pledges to his Kickstarter include items with varying images of Xylaria.

"We're not saying donate to help science," Vandegrift says. "We're saying buy something that you might have wanted anyway and help science ... We're using the strength of the art to support the strength of the science."

If this crowdfunding project succeeds, Vandegrift says he hopes it will send a message to the federal agencies creating scientific grants of the importance of funding basic sciences.

"If it can work for this project," Vandegrift says, "it could be a model for other researchers working on other groups of organisms."

So far, Vandegrift has raised $7,607 of his $67,000 goal, with a deadline of July 23. Find Vandegrift's Kickstarter at kickstarter.com/projects/werdnus/xylaria-of-the-cloud-forests-of-ecuador. ■

SLANT

- The Portland daily newspaper is not known for its affection for the University of Oregon, but President Michael Schill clearly won over reporter Andrew Theen for his page one story in the July 1 Oregonian. It's a good read, portraying the new pres as a smart, very hardworking, skilled fundraiser who truly intends to lift the academic side of the university. The closing sentence quotes a former colleague who says, "I think Oregon got really lucky."

- If you watched The West Wing, then you know that Friday is "Take Out the Trash Day." Government officials save potentially embarrassing stories for release on Friday in hopes they won't get much attention over the weekend. On July 1, shortly after 4 pm on the Friday before a holiday weekend, the city of Eugene sent out a press release saying the "general contractor for the Eugene City Hall project received the construction bids and provided an overview to city staff. Unfortunately, the bids have come in higher than the previous estimates." According to the press release, "it appears likely that the cost would exceed the estimates provided at a recent work session by somewhere between $1.5 million and $2.5 million." The city calls the future City Hall a "civic legacy project, planned to last 50 years or more," but we are still scratching our heads as to why the city tore down the legacy of our last City Hall with apparently no real plan or budget in place to replace it. Saving and redesigning our historic City Hall would have been a legacy. This is a boondoggle.

- July 4 weekend was clash of the events here in the Eug. Was it too much for our fair city? We have heard rumors that the Oregon Bach Festival had unsold tickets, that there were seats open at the Olympic Trials track and field events and that Fourth of July stalwart Art and the Vineyard had lower attendance. With Oregon County Fair on the horizon, we're wondering if we need to do a little better planning when it comes to inundating Lane County with things to do all in one month? Despite the rumors, every attempt we made to eat out was met with long lines at local eateries, so we're hoping the food scene benefitted!

- We commented in Slant last week on The Register-Guard's peculiar focus on a crime that no one is sure happened — alleged tree spiking at a mill in Noti. No spikes have been found, and local Earth First! group Cascadia Forest Defenders has told the R-G that "CFD does not encourage, condone or commit acts of senseless sabotage." Yet the R-G promptly came out with another story. What gives?

- People who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones. EW makes its share of typos, but the R-G's July 1 headline, "50 Percent Chance of Dangerous Air Bag Rapture" had us giggling. Jesus, take the wheel, there's been an air bag rapture. Almost as fun as the East Oregonian's now infamous "Amphibious Pitcher Makes Debut" (ambidextrous, oops).

- Hollis Shostrom and his company Perpetual Motion Design have a fundraiser at gofundme.com/pmdeugene. Shostrom says he is raising money for the design of innovative new wheelchairs including the construction of his own chair. Email pmdeugene@gmail.com for more info.

- Paul Moore of Arriving by Bike tells EW that according to Bicycle Retailer and Industry News (BRAIN) "Interbike has announced the first round of IB Award nominees for product, retailer and triathlon categories, including the bicycle retailer nominees." Online voting has begun, and IB Awards will be held during September's Interbike expo in Las Vegas. The retailer nominations were determined by an open industry online ballot then vetted by the BRAIN editorial staff. Categories for the retailer awards include Best Urban/Lifestyle Shop, Best Mountain Bike Shop, Best Women's/Female Friendly Shop and 2016 Retailer of the Year. Arriving by Bike is up for Best Urban/Lifestyle Shop, which "recognizes the specialty retailer that features the best selection, product mix and knowledgeable staff in the urban and lifestyle category. This shop appeals to commuters and recreational riders." Arriving by Bike is up against bike shops from across the country. Voting closes July 29; go to surveymonkey.com/r/2016IBAWardsBallot to vote.

- Home Instead's Let's Talk about Driving program is designed to help keep Eugene seniors safer on the road, the senior home health care service says. According to Home Instead, "A recent study found that when seniors stop driving, they run the risk of social isolation." The free program can be found at LetsTalkAboutDriving.com. Home Instead says, "The program encourages adult children to start the conversation about driving with their aging parents — and possibly find alternatives to quitting driving altogether."

AH OREGON COUNTRY FAIR

— it ain't just for hippies and trippers no more. In fact, it hasn't been an exclusively extended drug orgy for a long time (see "Notes of a Fair Virgin" for a hilarious meditation by a non-Fair goer), if it ever was. Yes, the Fair channels the communal, carnivalesque spirit of the Age of Aquarius, but over the years it has evolved and developed into something a bit more mainstream, a bit less narcotic and yet an event unique unto itself: a distinctly Northwest dream of utopia, a self-sustaining alternative village gripped by a kind of kaleidoscopic Renaissance spirit, where folks give free reign to their artsy-craftsy eccentric selves. The Fair, in this sense, is not only kid-friendly; it brings out the kid in us all — playful, awestruck, devious, voracious, a bit dirty behind the ears and full of boundless curiosity.

Oregon Country Fair runs Friday through Saturday, July 8-10; for info and tickets, visit oregoncountryfair.com.

OCF Lineup Keeps Vintage Performance Arts Alive

Like sunburns and fannypacks, vaudeville-style comedy and variety shows are a part of the Oregon Country Fair experience. In fact, OCF devotes entire stages to all sorts of popular entertainment from the age of daguerreotypes like tap dancing, puppetry and poetry readings.

Fair favorite Artis the Spoonman performs four times this year, kicking off 1:30 pm Friday, July 8, at the Daredevil Vaudeville Palace. Artis heads over to the Kesey Stage at 3:15 pm Sunday, July 10. See oregoncountryfair.org for a full list of Artis' performances.

For juggling fans, OCF has you covered: Jugglemania featuring Rhys Thomas, a performer with "hilarity and dexterity" who has opened for the likes of The Smothers Brothers and Weird Al Yankovich. Jugglemania performs first at the Monkey Palace 1 pm Friday, July 8.

The Charlie Brown Comedy Juggling Show performs 5:30 pm Friday, July 8, at Stage Left, and Mud Bay Jugglers with the Tune Stranglers perform at 2:30 pm Friday, July 8, at The Daredevil Vaudeville Palace. For additional information on juggling performances, check the Fair's website listed above.

It's an election year, and like the Merry Pranksters of yesteryear, OCF hasn't forgotten the political preoccupations of the event's founding generation. This year, catch Henrik Bothe of Bellini Twins and Flaming Heterosexuals, who will reflect everyone's Trump-o-noia with the All American/No Foreigner Variety Act. The "family-friendly show" promises "hardly any nudity." The All American/No Foreigner variety act begins its OCF residency 11 am Friday, July 8, on Stage Left, with additional performance times and locations listed online.

Kicking off their string of OCF appearances 11:30 am Friday, July 8, at Daredevil Vaudeville Palace, sketch comedy act Festival The Show mixes "original music, elaborate costumes, larger than life props and high flying acts." Check online for other performance times and locations.

Rounding out, and arguably headlining OCF '16's variety show offering, is Portland's Wanderlust Circus, bringing "aerialists, acrobats, contortionists and our cabaret orchestra" for "a magical fairytale of life on the Endless Road. A brand new show with fresh discoveries from the past year, and familiar faces from our Golden Age."

Wanderlust Circus first performs 2:30 pm Friday, July 8, on the WC Fields Stage; additional show times and locations are online or get a copy of the "Peach Pit," the official program for OCF available around town and on Fair grounds. — William Kennedy

YOU SHOULD BE DANCING

New pavilion invites Fair-goers to take off their shoes and shake it up

As you're cruising around the loops at the Oregon Country Fair, be sure to stop by the new Dance Pavilion, featuring movement performances and workshops for all.

"The dance space is for the exploration of dance and the movement arts," says volunteer site coordinator Shawn Kahl.

The Dance Pavilion stage and an adjacent outdoor studio, the "WorkIt Shop," have concurrent but separate programming throughout the weekend. Both areas welcome and encourage participation.

"We've adopted a unique format for many of our performance times," Kahl says, noting that the spaces "fuse together an instruction-and-participation model, which allows for learning as well as fun socialized dancing opportunities."

A committee, which reviewed the myriad applications, has selected the performers and teachers for the Dance Pavilion.

"We've intentionally featured many dance styles from around the world in an effort to include international communities," Kahl says, "and things are structured in a way that is inclusive to all participants."

This year's offerings include a variety of dance styles and forms, including yoga, belly dance, contact improvisation, African dance and Bhangra. There's something for everyone.

"We're also co-programming the Dance Pavilion and WorkIt Shop stages to have more cross-pollination," Kahl says.

The Connexus Dance Collective, for example — a group that holds social partner dance lessons at the Dance Pavilion — also offers workshops at the WorkIt stage on "consent on and off the dance floor."

"We have this type of relationship with several of our performers, with the intent being to offer a smaller, workshop-based opportunity to learn more about a particular style related to a larger performance on the Dance Pavilion," Kahl says.

The Dance Pavilion (and the entire new area, formerly known as Crafts Lot and now permanently named Xavanadu) was developed over a period of years "and has essentially been a vision of the Fair leadership for decades," Kahl asserts.

The Dance Pavilion construction came together last year and is quite impressive, with a large metal frame covered with tent, a bandstand for live music and a 2,600 square-foot hardwood dance floor surrounded by audience seating. The WorkIt shop stage also has a tent covering and serves as a smaller, more intimate venue for workshops and classes.

"As the Dance Pavilion grows, I have a vision of making the program a destination for dancers, not just a stop-off for people who happen to wander by the Dance Pavilion during their time at the Fair," Kahl explains.

Wanna check it out? Instructors just ask that participants show up on time and participate for the duration of the themed session.

"We've broken up the program into short (50 minute) sessions to allow for folks to have a full OCF experience without being tied up at the Dance Pavilion, and also to allow for a greater diversity of programming throughout the weekend," Kahl says.

"We are looking to get people on the dance floor," he adds, "connecting with each other as much as possible." — Rachael Carnes

A discussion with OCF's new general manager Tom Gannon

ooking back over his first year as general manager (GM) for the Oregon Country Fair, Tom Gannon says the thing that's surprised him the most is "how incredibly important ice is."

It might sound strange, but realize that the frosty lemonade you're enjoying, or that tasty burrito with extra sour cream, or your gluten-free hemp seed salad with extra hemp seeds, were all made off the grid. No one operating a food booth has a fridge to plug in — there are no plugs.

In a sense, OCF operates like a mammoth-sized campground, yet routinely dazzles all manner of health inspectors who patrol the loops the entire Fair weekend.

So, from food booths to medical tents, ice is king. The OCF lays in its supply in January and distribution is critical.

"No ice, no fair," Gannon says with a chuckle.

I'm speaking with Gannon in the upstairs offices at the Oregon Country Fair's Lawrence Street headquarters.

We're surrounded by 40 years of history: photos, posters, knickknacks, mementos, a small sampling from the cultural institution that has put a sleepy oak grove west of Eugene on the worldwide map.

This year, Gannon took the helm from Charlie Ruff, who had held his spot as Fair GM for years.

A friendly, burly guy, Gannon has colorful full-sleeve tattoos, bright eyes and speaks with the warm, competent cadence of someone who's seen it all before.

"This is my first main camp as the solo GM," Gannon says.

"We're in good shape financially," Gannon says. "But we have virtually a whole new staff — a new GM, a new assistant GM, new site manager, new caretaker."

(This was the last day in early June, before the crew — admin included — moved on site full time, to clean, mow, water and rebuild the Fair in anticipation of its July 8 opening.)

"There's been a lot of turnover and that has certainly been a challenge, but all these fresh eyes present opportunities to increase our institutional knowledge, too," Gannon says.

"My job is to create the framework so the people who can actually run the Fair — like that all-important ice crew — can do it," he says.

Remember, few get paid to do this work. Besides a skeleton crew of full-time staff, the OCF relies almost entirely on its army of volunteers to pull off its massive party in the woods.

"I've always been interested in city management," Gannon says. "And this is like an ephemeral city, with crew leaders, like the water crew, recycling, childcare, kind of acting as a zoning board. And then there are social groups, like the Community Village, that kind of serve as the nonprofits within the city."

Gannon hails from Seattle, where he managed commercial recycling and composting, including outreach and volunteer programs. He and his wife have two children, ages 4 and 8.

Looking back on the work he's accomplished this year, besides gearing up for thousands of visitors, Gannon says he's been glad to collaborate with local officials from Elmira and Veneta, OCF neighbors, to help facilitate positive change. "We were able to get state funding for a path along Territorial Highway to be built that connects Veneta and Elmira with a non-motorized path," he says.

Gannon says he meets regularly with the mayors and city managers of Veneta and Elmira to discuss mutual issues.

And he reports to the OCF board of directors, who not only wield an approximately $2 million annual budget, gifting a portion of that out each year to the local community, but are also stewards the vision for the future of the OCF. With Gannon's support, the board is entrusted with making decisions to stay the course in perpetuity.

Gannon may be a relative newcomer, but he's clearly proud of what the Fair represents. "If you think you know what the Oregon Country Fair is all about, prepare to be surprised," Gannon says. "We're open to however it is you want to present yourself." — Rachael Carnes

BEAUTY AND THE BREASTS

The forecast for Oregon Country Fair includes a definite chance of breasts — different shapes, sizes and protruding from bodies of all kinds.

This year, however, we're getting down to business about boobs. Katelyn Carey, author of the recently published Beauty After Breast Cancer, is giving a talk about this increasingly common milestone for women.

Carey has been working on changing the dialogue about breast cancer for the past three years by creating a "coffee-table" book that isn't overloaded with daunting medical terms and horrifying photos. Au contraire, the 38 folks in her 178-page book show off their newly sculpted bods and share their stories in ways that makes the experience more palpable — enjoyable, even.

Carey is no comedian, but she clearly has a sense of humor when it comes to breast cancer. And why not? Since one in eight women are reported to get breast cancer in their lifetime, Carey says everyone knows someone who goes through the journey. What isn't as common, though, is greeting the news with optimism. "This isn't going to be a scary talk," she says. "This is going to be a fun talk."

Usually breast cancer is met with fear, but Carey is actively trying to change the tools and resources for folks who receive the big news. "A new resource needed to exist for women," she says.

That resource is hope. By discussing and humanizing breast cancer, Carey aims to give people an easier go of things when facing a big life change like a mastectomy, or even just trying to stay calm during a routine mammogram.

Catch Carey's talk, "Change the World (A Story About Boobs)," 3 pm Saturday, July 9, at Rabbit Hole stage and 12:30 pm Sunday, July 10, at Front Porch stage. For more details about her work, visit beautyafterbreastcancer.com. — Kelsey Anne Rankin

FAIRLY LOCAL

2016 Fair live tunes lineup reflects Eugene scene

urvey Oregon Country Fair 2016's music schedule and find African blues rock 'n' roll with Portland's Dusu Mali Band (featuring Ibrahim Kelly, nephew of legendary Mali blues guitarist Ali Farka Toure) as well as homegrown indie rock from Eugene's Ferns (featuring world-class guitar work from Jake Pavlak, like a red-bearded mix of Johnny Marr of The Smiths and Tony Iommi of Black Sabbath. Unconfirmed rumor has it Ferns are on hiatus after this show, so don't miss 'em!)

Dusu Mali Band plays 11 am Friday and Saturday, July 8-9, and 2 pm Sunday, July 9, on the Monkey Palace Stage. Ferns play only once at 11 am Saturday, July 9, on the Hoarse Chorale stage at Chela Mela.

Those looking to keep their OCF experience EUG-centric should look into these other locals: Popular Eugene reggae act Sol Seed plays 3 pm Saturday, July 9, on the Hoarse Chorale Stage, and Marv Ellis @ We Tribe brings its brand of uplifting post-hip-hop, soul, funk and jazz to Monkey Palace Stage 6 pm Sunday, July 10. Both Ellis and Sol Seed are making big inroads regionally and beyond, becoming some of Eugene's biggest musical exports.

Speaking of local exports, how about a whole new style of music? Eugene's High Step Society presents their Eugene-innovated sound called "electro-swing" 6:15 pm Friday, July 8, on the Kesey Stage.

In a similar vein, Alcyon Massive makes the trip north from Ashland, bringing his "backwoods hip hop" and "roots reggae" to the Front Porch Stage 6 pm Friday, July 8, and again at that same hour Sunday, July 10. Also, don't miss Afrolicious: the Bay-area act plays Afrobeat and Brazilian break-beat funk with an electronic edge at 6 pm Friday, July 8, on the Main Stage.

A couple familiar Portland acts make their pilgrimage to the fair this year. Popular, twin-powered folk-rock act Shook Twins perform 2:55 pm (yes, 2:55 pm — why not? It's the Fair) Saturday, July 9, on the Main Stage. And like a Portlandia skit run amok, MarchFourth! returns with a kaleidoscopic mix of funk, rock, jazz, Afrobeat, Gypsy-brass and big band. MarchFourth! performs twice: 6 pm Friday, July 8, at the Monkey Palace and 6 pm Saturday, July 9, on the Main Stage.

And for funky Fair fans, New Orleans Dumpstaphunk plays Main Stage 4 pm Sunday, July 10. On the acoustic-string band tip, don't miss Vince Herman (Leftover Salmon, Great American Taxi) 5:50 pm Saturday, July 9, on the Blue Moon Stage. And Scott Law performs with Scott James and Cosmic Twang 2:50 pm Friday, July 8, on the Main Stage.

For a complete schedule of live music, including times and stages, visit oregoncountryfair.com or get a copy of the "Peach Pit," the official program for OCF available around town and on Fair grounds. — William Kennedy

NOTES OF A FAIR VIRGIN

A writer who's never been to Fair wonders what the big deal could be really do not understand Oregon Country Fair.

I've read the FAQ page, spoken with a handful of Fair-goers and have gotten the scoop on staying overnight. It's been several years since I've moved to Eugene and yet the mystery of Fair remains: What's the big deal?

A few times I've made the mistake of actually uttering such a question to a diehard Fair lover. I was then quickly confronted with a sense of blasphemy and deep sadness regarding my naiveté. After the initial shock, the person I've clearly offended usually responds with, "You have to go — you just have to."

It sounds a bit cult-like to an outsider (think about it), but there's probably a reason for people to get so pumped about sunburns, funnel cakes and over-priced everything.

From bits of information I've gathered regarding the hoopla, Fair sounds like a low-key 'shroom trip mixed with a kid-friendly folk music festival. One can almost smell the odeur de marijuana lingering in the air. Yep, I can see it now: folks in costumes, face paint and a shit-ton of body odor — and some people probably are, indeed, tripping the fuck out despite the Fair's drug- and alcohol-free policy on that FAQ.

But maybe there's something magical about the essence of Oregon Country Fair — what it stands for and what it brings to the community. It does seem cool that the masses of Eugene and surrounding areas gather in some field near Veneta, simply to get weird with one another. Some people have been going since they were kids and are now sharing the experience with their own little ones (whose faces are probably caked in paint within the first hour).

Fair does seem to have a community-bonding vibe about it. If you're into human interaction, there are probably plenty of new people to meet and activities to be had. There might even be a craft circle.

And just think of the local crafts scene. Gadgets, gizmos and abstract pieces you have to stare at strictly with your head cocked to the side while saying, "Ohhhhh." I also hear the whole shebang is full of astonishing creations from gigantic to minuscule, with art in every form imaginable.

Okay, so Fair doesn't sound that intimidating. It sounds rad, actually. Whatever the hell is going on in that field, it seems to have grown into an integral part of good ol' Eugene culture. A tradition that, however strange, may just be a really wonderful, once-in-a-lifetime experience. — Kelsey Anne Rankin

Where once there was merely a KISS Army (the name for KISS' official fanclub), there seems to have grown a KISS Industrial Complex. KISS, now more than 40 years running, is thought to be the most successful band in rock history when it comes to merchandising. In fact, the wavy line between rock group and shopping mall novelty has blurred so much that even band members sometimes mistake themselves for living, breathing tchotchkes; few years back, KISS frontman Gene Simmons told CNN Money: "My favorite piece of merchandising is me." Simmons estimates that KISS is a billion dollar industry. Over the years the band has officially licensed approximately 3,000 KISS-themed products: T-Shirts, booty shorts, board games, tote bags, trading cards, condoms, plush toys, Christmas tree ornaments, bath towels, comic books, pinball machines, protective cellphone and iPad cases, barbeque sauce, golf club covers, M&Ms and much more. Diehard KISS Army recruits can even be buried in official KISS coffins. Whatever it is you want, you can find it with a flaming KISS logo emblazoned on it. The lucrative theatrical hard rock glam band brings its Freedom to Rock Tour to Eugene Saturday, check out the merch tables.

KISS: Freedom to Rock begins 8pm Saturday, July 9, the Matthew Knight Arena, UO; $39-$125.

The world lost an amazing artist a few months ago, when Newport-born Rick Bartow died at age 69. Bartow relied on graphite, acrylic paints, woodworking tools and more to convey things known, but unexplainable. His creations — hanging in galleries and museums around the country, including the Smithsonian and, for a time, the White House — are sometimes playful and vivid, and other times tormented half animal, half man mutations with flashing white teeth and wild pain in their eyes. To honor Bartow’s life and work, the Oregon Coast Council has organized an exhibition titled Rick Bartow: A Community Collection, which opens Friday at the Newport Visual Arts Center and runs through August.

The public reception for Rick Bartow: A Community Collection runs 5-7pm Friday, July 8, at the Newport Visual Arts Center, 777 NW. Beach Dr., Newport; FREE.

IT'S NOT FUNNY ANYMORE

In Tickled, journalist David Farrier exposes the wealth, power and abuse behind a bizarre Internet fetish

“I started this journey curious about a bizarre sport called competitive endurance tickling,” says New Zealand journalist David Farrier near the conclusion of his strange and upsetting documentary Tickled. “But I now think this was never even about tickling. This is about power, control and harassment. It’s about one person’s twistedness and how far that can go.”

Co-directed by Farrier and videographer Dylan Reeve, Tickled is funny for about five minutes before it veers off into an unnerving odyssey that leads the filmmakers down the hermetic, perverted corridors of money and corruption. At first, when Farrier happens upon his first tickling website — in which hunky young straight guys are bound, piled upon and tickled by other hunky guys — he is bemused and, yes, curious.

He decides to pursue the story. It doesn’t take long, however, before he hits the wall: Farrier is contacted by the site’s representative and told that, because he’s homosexual, they’d rather he didn’t bring bad publicity upon their harmless entertainment. The harder he pushes, the more vicious becomes the pushback, until he’s called a “faggot” and threatened with legal action.

Tickled is one of the most bizarre and creepy documentaries I’ve seen in a long time, and the less I say about the details of the story, the better; it seems that every five minutes or so, a new revelation is cracked open, sending Farrier on increasingly alarming and distressing tangents — the results are like getting trapped in some sadistic, crypto-fascist hall of mirrors where money, lawyers and blackmailers operate with absolute impunity, dealing destruction willy-nilly for the sole satisfaction of one person’s oddball fetish.

It’s an old story — camels and needle-eyes and all that — and yet, for all its timeless familiarity, the vile egotism and omniscient control of the filthy rich never stops being compelling, confusing and frustrating when brought to the light of day. What’s fascinating about Tickled is not the fetish at its core, a seemingly harmless yen to make another person squirm and squeak in orgasmic ambivalence, but the lengths to which someone will go to satisfy that urge.

As Farrier pursues an increasingly elusive and recalcitrant truth, receiving dire threats all along the way, we witness the ways power and money function when confronted by the people harmed: Deny, lie, deflect and threaten. By the time he peels back the curtained layers of deceit covering an international operation of tickling voyeurism, Farrier seems almost disappointed to find that the person pulling the levers is such an insipid and sad homunculus — like some closeted, self-loathing Wizard of Oz hiding behind myriad false identities and an endless assault of bigoted, abusive mumbo-jumbo.

“It’s all family money,” Farrier says at one point of the perpetrator’s wealth. Indeed. Money is as money does, and I suspect that, behind closed doors, the rich have always indulged in whatever the fuck excesses they want to without a care in the world for who or what they damage. In this way, Tickled is simply a modern, real-life updating of movies ranging from Citizen Kane to Pasolini’s Salò to the more recent Foxcatcher. Yet, lurking beneath the surface of Tickled is a subtle cautionary message about this scary new age we’re caught in, wherein the worldwide web has become the new gothic dungeon, and victimization can go global with a spontaneity that is impossible to halt. The hallways of power are now digital, and no one is safe — especially, as usual, the poor and dispossessed young, willing to be kootchi-kooed for a few bucks. (Broadway Metro) ■

FOK INTERESSANT!

In which the author interviews her mum about South African shock crew Die Antwoord, who return to Cuthbert July 14

Last week I called up my 69-year-old white mum in Minnesota with a special request: Listen to Die Antwoord's new mixtape Suck On This and let me interview you about it.

Die Antwoord would probably top the list of music you shouldn't listen to with your mother, or vice versa, but, like a boss, my mum accepted the challenge.

First, let's be clear here: Mum is no music critic, or musician, but she did grow up in South Africa from ages 4 to 25, and Die Antwoord is one of South Africa's biggest cultural exports, ever (don't even think about it Nelson Mandela, Charlize Theron, Trevor Noah, Elon Musk).

Made up of the indefinable Afrikaans rapping duo consisting of Ninja and Yo-Landi V (and, hidden in the background, DJ Hi-Tek), Die Antwoord has been described as "shock rap-rave," "electro-rap" and "savage rap."

I think they're aliens — art-house aliens spitting some of the weirdest, most graphic and innovative rhymes of the new millennium, while crafting an intoxicating image, equal parts beautiful and downright icky, with a healthy dose of satire.

They introduced the outside world to zef, a South African counterculture whose American cultural equivalent would be somewhere at the crossroads of trailer trash, punk rock, kitsch and grindhouse schlock (she sports a peroxide mullet and fake nails for days; his go-to is boxer shorts, a chest-full of tattoos and a grill — they both frequently wear terrifying inky black contact lenses).

Die Antwoord was last in Eugene in May 2014. I've never walked away from a show in this town with more bruises or more of a contact high. It was well worth it. They return to the Cuthbert July 14, or Bastille Day, the same day a crowd stormed the Bastille prison in Paris and freed the inmates — the date seems apt somehow.

OK, back to Mum, who grew up around Cape Town, South Africa's second largest city, where Die Antwoord formed in 2008.

What was your first reaction, Mum?

"It's very flat. No one I know speaks Afrikaans or English that way," she says, comparing their accent to American "hillbillies."

"Asides from that, even though it's not my kind of music, I think they've done something amazing — even though everything is 'fuck this' or 'fuck that.'"

My mum points out that two of the songs are old lullabies she knew as a kid. "Siembaba," which Vi$$er sings in her evil pixie purr, means "We Catch Him" in Xhosa, the language of an ethnic group of the same name in South Africa and one of the country's 11 official languages; Afrikaans and English (more like British English than American) are two others.

It's about killing a snake, my mom explains. "It's kind of gross when you follow it word by word."

The other is "Jan Pierewiet," which she instantly starts singing from memory over the phone.

I had also asked my mum while listening to Suck On This to take notes on references or Afrikaans terms that would fly over the heads of American fans.

"In number four: 'Where's My Fukn Cup Cake,'" my mum points out matter-of-factly. "Yo-Landi says 'poes,' which is like 'pussy.'"

Then she explains the meaning of the song title for track 10, "Fok Julle Naaiers."

"People who listen to this probably have no idea it means 'Fuck You Fuckers.'"

Oh Mum, I think they probably have some idea. This is the band with song titles like "Gucci Coochie," "Happy Go Sucky Fucky" and "Girl I Want 2 Eat U." But yes, good to know.

Next example — my mum, obviously tickled by this assignment, has a lot of examples — is for track 13, an "Enter Da Ninja" remix.

If you've been reading this to your kids, you weirdos, now would be the time to send them to bed.

"There is a couple lines in Afrikaans." She translates the lyrics roughly: "Goat is my little friend and goat likes my hole."

OK. Wow. The goat neighing in the background on that track makes a lot of sense now. Yikes.

"Honestly, not only is this all about having sex with everybody in every possible orifice, but also with goats," mum says of the mixtape. "Oh my god, indeed. I don't even want to tell anyone I listened to this."

Die Antwoord is all about artful yet explicit and boorish shock value — traits South Africa was not necessarily known for before the group burst onto the international stage in 2010. Even though my mum left South Africa in 1972, in the thick of white supremacist Apartheid, I wondered if she had any ideas about what kind of proto-culture gave birth to these wacko geniuses.

"If this group had existed in South Africa then, it would have been banned," she says. "We weren't allowed to read Black Beauty because it had the word 'black' in it."

She continues: "There's not much about this couple's background, but it was so repressed in South Africa. On a Sunday, you weren't allowed to read anything but the Bible. Maybe this was a generation that rebelled against their very Calvinist upbringing."

South Africa, in fact, was the last country on the continent to get TV in 1976 — about three decades after the U.S. "It wasn't allowed," she recalls. "It would corrupt people," or that's the spin the Apartheid government gave, she says.

Mum also says she picks up on a lot of class anger in Die Antwoord's music.

"I'm no expert, but my thoughts when I was listening were, oh my god, this is another symptom of the anger that's all around — ISIS, voters in the U.K., Trump supporters," she says.

She adds: "A lot of working classes have never gone up the economic rungs," and resentment is growing worldwide. Groups like Die Antwoord speak to this, "because you feel things so strongly and then it finally bursts out."

So would Mum attend a Die Antwoord show if given a ticket?

"I think now I would, yes," she says. "I don't know if I could last the whole show." She says that listening to the mixtape was a "learning experience."

And if she had to write a one-line review of Suck On This?

"I would say: 'Fok interessant!,' which means 'Fucking interesting!'" she laughs.

Thanks, Mum. ■

Die Antwoord returns 7 pm Thursday, July 14, at Cuthbert Amphitheatre; $37.50 adv., $43 door. And believe it or not, the show is open to all ages. To listen to the Suck On This mixtape for free, find it on SoundCloud.com.

UP THE FUNK

The Elena Leona Project (ELP) is sizzle, spice and everything nice. Like the lovechild of Lauren Hill and Etta James, this band is funky.

ELP started in Eugene and has been performing at local venues for a few years. The band has undergone several makeovers (switching out some band members here and there) since the beginning, but Elena Leona (lead vocals) says, “This feels like the right group.”

Contagiously excitable, Leona’s personality shines through in her amazing vocal control. In the length of one song, she’ll go from rap to velvety vocals, to jazz scat and belting out downright incredible notes. Will Brack keeps the time on drums while John Brewer (guitar) and Zach Rousch (bass) move fluidly between slow blues and fast jazz melodies.

“Our sound is urban groove,” Leona says, “a sound that is something for everyone.”

ELP has a strong community focus as well. Leona says they’ve been working on putting together a show for the Boys and Girls Club of Emerald Valley and recently played at a Bags of Love charity event. She points out that the band gets inspiration from this quirky little town, too — “First Cup of Coffee” was inspired by her first cup of morning joe via Dutch Bros.

The band has plans to buckle down and grind out its first EP this winter, Leona says, and until then it will just up the funk level around town (musically, that is).

ELP will be performing 6 pm Wednesday, July 13, at WildCraft Cider Works, 390 Lincoln Street; FREE. — Kelsey Anne Rankin

CASSETTE SEASON

Kneeling at the altar of The Kinks, The Pixies and Nirvana, Season One!, the debut album from popular Eugene garage-rock trio VCR, has finally arrived. And rest assured, it's fantastic.

The self-produced album, recorded in Portland on analog tape, features Chase Clarke on guitar and vocals, Emily Hurt on bass and Tyler P. Howard on drums.

"Outta My Head" is a three-chord blast of pummeling proto-punk ecstasy — a lesson that rock 'n' roll is best served recklessly noisy and defiantly tuneful (while staying in-tune remains optional).

Throughout the record, Clark howls like Frank Black, strangling hook after hook from his long-suffering guitar. VCR owns every bit of feedback, all the tape hiss, every whoopsy-daisy wrong note and clattering, rushed backbeat like a badge of lo-fi, punk-rock honor.

"Although the album has some of our signature sloppiness," Clarke explains, "the album has life, especially if you listen to it loudly. That's who we are."

He adds: "It sounds like you're at a VCR show and that's what I've always wanted for us."

Season One! is available on cassette at VCR shows and can be sampled off VCR's Bandcamp page. — William Kennedy

BOSSYPANTS

After 16 years, Boss Hog, a side project of Jon Spencer of the Jon Spencer Blues Explosion, has returned with the Brood Star EP, a self-described amuse-bouche to the band's forthcoming full-length album Brood X.

Boss Hog frontwoman, and longtime partner to Spencer, Cristina Martinez tells EW that after so many years, the time had come to release new material.

"We have never stopped playing together," Martinez says. "Eventually, we had accumulated so much stuff it seemed stupid to not put them on a record."

Similar to the Jon Spencer Blues Explosion, Brood Star's "Wichita Grey" is a messy and sludgy amalgam of American music: trashy, groovy and bluesy, echoing gospel and R&B mixed with pre-Disney, Times Square and Las Vegas decadence.

Advance press for Brood Star calls it "primitive, raw, punk rock 'n' roll, re-imagined for a New World." Martinez describes Brood Star's new world of social media and, in terms of music, an emphasis on the single instead of the album, as unfamiliar.

"It's all very foreign to me," she says, "though I'm proud to say of the band: We now have a proper Facebook page and Instagram. We've stepped into the 21st century."

Boss Hog plays with Hurry Up 8 pm Wednesday, July 13, at Hi-Fi Music Hall's Lounge; $15 adv., $18 door, 21-plus.

WHO'S WHO AND
WHAT'S WHAT IN DANCE
THIS MONTH BY RACHAEL CARNES

First, an appeal: If you love dance like I do and long to see performances with national and international reach, please use this lull in local performance to consider a trip to Portland this year to see Whitebird Dance.

I've recently made the easy commute to see the pioneering Twyla Tharp (review at the EW blog: goo.gl/NqYsd7), Kidd Pivot, Cirque Alfonse (which blew my mind) and La Compagnie Hervé Koubi, whose seminal work, What the Day Owes the Night, left me speechless (read more on Koubi here: goo.gl/v2Wzpf)

And if I had no other commitments, I'd get myself to PDX for every single event in Whitebird's tremendous 19th season:

Camille Brown returns to Whitebird with a humorous and poignant look at what it means to be a young African-American woman today. Also on the bill: Britain's charismatic BalletBoyz, Brazil's urban street dancers of Companhia Urbana de Dança and Argentina's stomping gauchos of Che Malambo. (Che Malambo recently came to Eugene via The Shedd, but I don't think many dance people realized it.)

Whitebird season standouts include Ronald K. Brown/EVIDENCE and Reggie Wilson/Fist and Heel Performance Group, titans in contemporary dance. (Side note: Ronald K. Brown's company performed at the Hult Center in 2008, the last effort of the Hult Presents dance series, before the city of Eugene's Library, Recreation and Cultural Services department made the decision to put its dance program on hiatus and to transfer its funding to its public art and community events programs.) Here's a bit of ancient history, a preview I penned for Brown's Hult Performance in '08: goo.gl/7aJK7J.

Especially exciting is the long-awaited return of Israel's Inbal Pinto and Avshalom Pollak Dance Company. From Montreal's 7 Fingers Circus Company (Les 7 Doigts de la Main) comes the thrilling and delectable Cuisine & Confessions, uniting acrobatics with cooking (take the kids). For more info, visit whitebird.org.

Locally, we hear #instaballet will perform its unique brand of interactive dance at the Lane Arts Council's First Friday ArtWalk through September. Missed the July event? Circle your calendar for the next one Aug. 5 at the Broadway Commerce Center Lobby (at Broadway and Willamette), 5:30 to 8 pm.

Heading to the Oregon Country Fair? Catch the #instaballet workshop 3 to 4 pm Sunday, July 10, on the Village Green at the Community Village.

Danceability International has a busy month with performances across the region featuring favorite repertory and new choreography by Jana Meszaros and Kelcie Laube. Catch Danceability at the Oregon Country Fair 11 am Sunday, July 10, at the new Dance Pavilion; in Kesey Square noon Wednesday, July 13; at Lane County Fair 2 pm Sunday, July 24; and at the Children's Festival 10:30 am Saturday, July 30, at Island Park in Springfield. The group also offers a teacher training with founder Alito Alessi Aug. 7 to Sept. 2. More info at danceability.com.

In studio news, South Lane Ballet Academy in Cottage Grove has opened a new studio, offering tap, jazz, ballet, modern and hip hop; southlaneballetacademy.org.

And the River Road area is heating up, according to Dance With Us studio's Laura Taylor: "We had 70-plus people show up for our June Dance! It was great to see people from ages 19 to 93 having fun dancing together."

Taylor adds: "Social dance is one of the few things that I have seen where multiple generations enjoy spending time together." Check out danceeugene.com.

And Ballet Fantastique offers summer intensives for "seriously motivated dancers" ages 7 to 24 including its Professional Dancer Development Program, Conservatory Program, Young Ballerina Summer Intensive, Junior Summer Intensive with Dance Fundamentals Workshop and Dance Fundamentals Workshop. More info at balletfantastique.org.

RING AROUND THE ROSÉS

Pretty pink wines go well with summer

In our lab, Mole was vigorously pulling corks and polishing rimless glasses: time for our annual “Rosé Report.”

In the last few years, rosés have really come out of the closet. Well, they never actually went into the deep closet; they just got buried (in U.S. markets anyway) under the flood of white zinfandels, sweet pink (“blush”) wines mass-produced and marketed by Cali vintners.

Let’s be clear: In matters of taste, personal preference rules. If you like it, no apology is needed. And some white zin lovers really dig their drink of choice. Too, some Cali vintners are fairly careful in their winemaking. Beringer NV White Zinfandel, “semi-dry,” ($6), for example, is quite friendly, served cold and sweet at the backyard BBQ during the hot months of summer. And as noted: If you dig it, ’nuff said.

Mole sez, “Summatime, ev’body should be drinkin’ rosies. Dey can be so pretty ‘n’ dey goes wit’ lotsa summa chow, li’ cold meats, noodle salads, good grub li’ dat. Dey gots moah flava dan whities ‘n’ dey can be pretty cool ‘n’ still taste great.” Mole likes “rosies” year-round.

Without getting too technical, we should explain that rosés can come in various styles, sweet or bone-dry, sparkling or still. Colors vary, too, from nearly transparent to real pink to light red, depending on the color of the red grapes used (and time given in contact with skins) and the vintner’s own intentions.

But there’s also saignée — French for a “bleed,” usually from the first pressing of a “big” red wine, concentrating flavors of the more valuable red while yielding a cheaper, sell-able pink — and what some wine-folk call “intentional” rosés, meaning the vintner intended to make a “rosie” from the harvest, typical of rosies from the Provence region of France, where rosés are regarded as quite serious wines.

The seriousness shows. While some saignée rosies can be enjoyable — it depends on the vintner — serious rosés can be special. And, we’re sad to say, the French still set the standard. For one example, Domaine de Fontaine 2014 Gris de Gris ($18), from the Corbières region, is pale in color, crisply dry but displaying a full range of flavors on the palate, from red fruits and berries, of course, to leafy greens to accents of tangerine, just delicious and versatile. (Label notes “Imported by Kermit Lynch”; Mole: “Trust Kermie.”)

Oregon’s vintners are making some yummy rosies. A saignée, Stanton 2015 Rosé of Pinot Noir ($14.50) is very pretty, with distinct rose petal notes and balanced acidity. King Estate’s Acrobat 2015 Rosé of Pinot Noir ($13) is a saignée, light red, but quite quaffable, lotsa red-berry fruit, good balance.

A rosé surprise: Marché Provisions recently held (and sold out) its second (annual) Drink Pink Party and the crowd faves were — wait for it — German (!), including Villa Wolf 2015 Pinot Noir Rosé ($13). Suddenly, lotsa folk are gettin’ serious ’bout rosies. Cool.

Along with many other outtowners (besides France and Germany), we like Seven Hills 2015 Dry Rosé ($16) deftly blended of “mostly” cabernet franc, with portions of petite Verdot and Malbec, but pale copper in color, flavors of red berries, herbs, citrus, food-ready acidity. Walla Walla (Washington) winemaker Casey McClellan is skilled and intends to make classic rosé. King Estate’s North by Northwest 2015 Rosé ($11) is an exciting blend of Columbia Valley grapes, 94 percent riesling (!) but dosed and colored by merlot and syrah — just delicious flavors of white-flowers, red currants, herbs. From Salem, Upper Five 2015 Rosé of Grenache ($17.50), grapes from Rogue Valley, is terrific, pale salmon color, round, ripe red-fruit flavors.

Local winemakers have produced barrels of delish rosies (hope you tasted many at this year’s Art & the Vineyard). Among our top picks (there are sooo many deserving our attention) is Territorial 2015 Rosé of Pinot Gris ($15), an “intentional” rosé, classically pale but delightfully complex in flavors and acutely balanced.

Pinks are stylin’. Trust your favorite makers/labels and add cool pinks to your summer pleasures. ■

HELLO! MY NAME IS

Let Eugene Star Tours Show You the Way... Have you ever wished you could just get to Portland without all that driving? Of course, you can take the train or the bus, but you can't design your own trip or stop when you need to stop if you take a train or bus. Wouldn't it be cool if people could customize their day-long or overnight trip from Eugene to Portland? At least, that's how Rod Minarik thinks. Minarik treks up to Portland each week to drive commercially. Before he started driving in Portland, he drove in his home town—Eugene. As he travelled back and forth between the two cities, he was inspired with an idea. After years of taking folks to galleries, concerts, museums and events as a commercial driver in Portland, he thought, Why not take a van load of, say, fifteen passengers and let them loose in Portland at their desired destinations? His idea took hold. Minarik began to design a plan for a new business, and Eugene-Star Tours was born. Eugene Star Tours offers ideas and suggests destinations to support your own unique plan for the day. Invite your family and friends to join you! Sit back, relax, and leave the rest to us! The basic rate for one such day of round-trip travel with Eugene Star Tours is billed as "$125 to Anywhere" (in the Portland area), and this can include sporting events and restaurants, festivals and fireworks, beer or wine tours and more. Call to let EugeneStarTours know where you want to go and let us take you there! To book a tour, contact Eugene Star Tours at [541] 954-5653 or via email at: estar@EugeneStarTours.com. All about us at: <http://www.EugeneStarTours.com>.

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Events in the coming week may trick your mind and tweak your heart. They might mess with your messiah complex and wreak havoc on your habits. But I bet they will also energize your muses and add melodic magic to your mysteries. They will slow you down in such a way as to speed up your evolution, and spin you in circles with such lyrical grace that you may become delightfully clear-headed. Will you howl and moan? Probably, but more likely out of poignant joy, not from angst and anguish. Might you be knocked off course? Perhaps, but by a good influence, not a bad one.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): In the book A Survival Guide to the Stress of Organizational Change, the authors tell you how to raise your stress levels. Assume that others are responsible for lowering your stress levels, they say. Resolve not to change anything about yourself. Hold on to everything in your life that's expendable. Fear the future. Get embroiled in trivial battles. Try to win new games as you play by old rules. Luckily, the authors also offer suggestions on how to reduce your stress. Get good sleep, they advise. Exercise regularly. Don't drink too much caffeine. Feel lots of gratitude. Clearly define a few strong personal goals, and let go of lesser wishes. Practice forgiveness and optimism. Talk to yourself with kindness. Got all that, Taurus? It's an excellent place to start as you formulate your strategy for the second half of 2016.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Normally I'm skeptical about miraculous elixirs and sudden cures and stupendous breakthroughs. I avoid fantasizing about a "silver bullet" that can simply and rapidly repair an entrenched problem. But I'm setting aside my caution as I evaluate your prospects for the coming months. While I don't believe that a sweeping transformation is guaranteed, I suspect it's far more likely than usual. I suggest you open your mind to it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): As I gaze into my crystal ball and invoke a vision of your near future, I find you communing with elemental energies that are almost beyond your power to control. But I'm not worried, because I also see that the spirit of fun is keeping you safe and protected. Your playful strength is fully unfurled, ensuring that love always trumps chaos. This is a dream come true: You have a joyous confidence as you explore and experiment with the Great Unknown, trusting in your fluidic intuition to guide you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): "You can only go halfway into the darkest forest," says a Chinese proverb. "Then you are coming out the other side." You will soon reach that midpoint, Leo. You may not recognize how far you have already come, so it's a good thing I'm here to give you a heads-up. Keep the faith! Now here's another clue: As you have wandered through the dark forest, you've been learning practical lessons that will come in handy during the phase of your journey that will begin after your birthday.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): My devoted contingent of private detectives, intelligence agents, and psychic sleuths is constantly wandering the globe gathering data for me to use in creating your horoscopes. In recent days, they have reported that many of you Virgos are seeking expansive visions and mulling long-term decisions. Your tribe seems unusually relaxed about the future, and is eager to be emancipated from shrunken possibilities. Crucial in this wonderful development has been an inclination to stop obsessing on small details and avoid being distracted by transitory concerns. Hallelujah! Keep up the good work. Think BIG! BIGGER! BIGGEST!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): After years of painstaking research, the psychic surgeons at the Beauty and Truth Lab have finally perfected the art and science of Zodiac Makeovers. Using a patented technique known as Mythic Gene Engineering, they are able to transplant the planets of your horoscope into different signs and astrological houses from the ones you were born with. Let's say your natal Jupiter suffers from an uncongenial aspect with your Moon. The psychic surgeons cut and splice according to your specifications, enabling you to be re-coded with the destiny you desire. Unfortunately, the cost of this pioneering technology is still prohibitive for most people. But here's the good news, Libra: In the coming months, you will have an unprecedented power to reconfigure your life's path using other, less expensive, purely natural means.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): In high school I was a good athlete with a promising future as a baseball player. But my aspirations were aborted in sophomore year when the coach banished me from the team. My haircut and wardrobe were too weird, he said. I may have been a skillful shortstop, but my edgy politics made him nervous and mad. At the time I was devastated by his expulsion. Playing baseball was my passion. But in retrospect I was grateful. The coach effectively ended my career as a jock, steering me toward my true callings: poetry and music and astrology. I invite you to identify a comparable twist in your own destiny, Scorpio. What unexpected blessings came your way through a seeming adversary? The time is ripe to lift those blessings to the next level.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do you remember that turning point when you came to a fork in the road of your destiny at a moment when your personal power wasn't strong? And do you recall how you couldn't muster the potency to make the most courageous choice, but instead headed in the direction that seemed easier? Well, here's some intriguing news: Your journey has delivered you, via a convoluted route, to a place not too far from that original fork in the road. It's possible you could return there and revisit the options — which are now more mature and meaningful — with greater authority. Trust your exuberance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): I love writing horoscopes for you. Your interest in my insights spurs my creativity and makes me smarter. As I search for the inspiration you need next, I have to continually reinvent my approach to finding the truth. The theories I had about your destiny last month may not be applicable this month. My devotion to following your ever-shifting story keeps me enjoyably off-balance, propelling me free of habit and predictability. I'm grateful for your influence on me! Now I suggest that you compose a few thank-you notes similar to the one I've written here. Address them to the people in your life who move you and feed you and transform you the best.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): After an Illinois man's wife whacked him in the neck with a hatchet, he didn't hold a grudge. Just the opposite. Speaking from a hospital room while recovering from his life-threatening wound, Thomas Deas testified that he still loved his attacker, and hoped they could reconcile. Is this admirable or pathetic? I'll go with pathetic. Forgiving one's allies and loved ones for their mistakes is wise, but allowing and enabling their maliciousness and abuse should be taboo. Keep that standard in mind during the coming weeks, Aquarius. People close to you may engage in behavior that lacks full integrity. Be compassionate but tough-minded in your response.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Can water run uphill? Not usually. But there's an eccentric magic circulating in your vicinity, and it could generate phenomena that are comparable to water running uphill. I wouldn't be surprised, either, to see the equivalent of stars coming out in the daytime. Or a mountain moving out of your way. Or the trees whispering an oracle exactly when you need it. Be alert for anomalous blessings, Pisces. They may be so different from what you think is possible that they could be hard to recognize.

HOMEWORK: Imagine that thanks to scientific breakthroughs and good luck, you're alive in 2096. What's your life like? FreeWillAstrology.com.

It is a bit peculiar having a black cat named Snow White, but that hasn't phased this old lady one bit. Much like the real Snow White, this cat is a princess that deserves the pampering that comes with being royalty. She would prefer a quiet home since she is an older cat, but gets along well with other cats and cat-savvy dogs. She is affectionate, gentle and enjoys the outdoors. Most of all Snow White would like to find a nice, sunny spot to nap in her new forever home.

SAVAGE LOVE

SCENES FROM A MARRIAGE
BY DAN SAVAGE

My wife and I have been married for 14 years and in a committed (I assumed) relationship for 17 years. Sex between us [often kinky] has always been great. We have a wonderful life together and two perfect children. I thought we were good; turns out things were too good to be true. I learned recently that my wife has been unfaithful to me throughout our marriage. She began an affair with an older man soon before we were married, and they were physically intimate for five years, including bondage and a Master/sub relationship. The physical sex stopped, but phone sex and online flirting continued up until I discovered this two weeks ago. This is a man I know. She has introduced our children to him. There's more: She slept with another man (just once, more bondage) but also flirted with him online and met up with him while I was away. She slept with yet another man she works with (just once, vanilla this time). She had phone sex with at least two other men and flirted with still more on Facebook. This came out because I was jealous about something that now seems minor and checked her e-mail. (Not proud of that.) She is repentant and relieved that I finally know, and she promises that she will be faithful from now on. I'll always love her, and I know she loves me. We had one session with a counselor and another is scheduled. Results were mixed. One thing that came out was that she has never been faithful to a romantic/sexual partner. I could forgive a one-time drunken fling, but this is a consistent pattern of infidelity that runs from the beginning of our marriage, and I had no idea. I cannot process it. I thought she had always been as loyal as I've been, which is to say completely. I can't put my wedding ring on—it feels like a lie. I have no one to talk to. For the sake of our future, the love we still share, and our children, we are committed to fixing things, but we're not sure how.

Heartbroken And Devastated

I'm going to preface my response with what someone in my position is expected to say and what, given the circumstances, may even be true: Your marriage is over. The scale, duration, and psychological cruelty of your wife's betrayals may be too great for you to overcome.

But you didn't need me to tell you that, HAD. You knew that already. So I can only assume you wrote wanting to hear something else. You don't need me to outline the reasons you should leave, and you don't need my permission to go. You wrote because you're looking for a reason to stay.

I'll give it my best shot.

A long-term relationship is a myth two people create together. It's not chemistry, it's not math, it's not engineering. It's a story, HAD, a story we tell each other, a story we tell others, and a story we tell ourselves.

And sometimes it's a story we have to revise.

Right now, it feels like the story you've been telling yourself and others about your marriage is a lie: not partly, but wholly. You thought your marriage was a loving, committed, and "completely loyal" one, but it's not—it can't be, and it never was, because she was cheating on you from the beginning.

But loyalty isn't something we demonstrate with our genitals alone. Your wife wasn't loyal to you sexually, HAD, and that's painful. And the conventional "wisdom" is that people don't cheat on partners they love. But you were married to this woman, and you describe your marriage as good, loving, and wonderful. And it somehow managed to be all those things despite your wife's betrayals. She must have been loyal to you in other ways or you would've divorced her long before you discovered her infidelities. Think back over the last 17 years: every kind and loving gesture, every considerate action, every intimacy, every moment you took care of each other—was it all a lie?

I'm not trying to exonerate your wife, and I'm not trying to minimize her betrayal or your pain. But if you want to stay together, HAD, you're going to have to tell yourself a new story, one that makes room for contradiction (loves you, cheated on you), betrayal (shitloads), apologies (shitloads from her), forgiveness (shitloads from you), and... some accommodations going forward. If I may paraphrase Maya Angelou: When someone finally shows you who they are—after you found the incriminating e-mails—you should believe them. Your wife has never been faithful to you or to anyone else, HAD, at least not sexually. Adjusting your expectations and making accommodations accordingly is more realistic than expecting your wife to become a different person.

Finally, HAD, a little bonus advice. I ran into Esther Perel, author of Mating in Captivity: Unlocking Erotic Intelligence, the day your letter arrived. Perel is a psychotherapist and couples counselor whose most recent TED Talk ("Rethinking Infidelity") is one you're going to want to watch. I shared your letter with Perel and asked her what she thought: Based on her vast experience working with couples confronting infidelity, did she think your marriage was doomed?

"No, I don't," said Perel.

Perel's response honestly surprised me. We spoke for 10 minutes, and I recorded the conversation. It won't fit in this space—so I'm going to post Perel's thoughts as the Savage Love Letter of the Day when this column comes out. So you're going to get a second opinion from an actual expert, HAD, and—spoiler alert—it's a hopeful one.

I'm a cis woman in my late 20s. About three months ago, I had my first one-night stand. I've noticed my thoughts have continued to gravitate toward this man ever since—despite having other sexual partners in the interim. I recently ran across his profile on Tinder—however, I'm fairly sure he hasn't logged on for a while as certain things weren't up to date. While I obviously swiped right, I'm curious as to whether it would be seen as inappropriate or possibly invasive if I were to reach out via the powers of social media. The night we had went well—it was all incredibly comfortable sexually, and I found him very interesting to talk to both before and after we hooked up. I should mention that I left rather swiftly that evening without grabbing his number in an attempt to "play it cool." I definitely don't want to cross social or personal boundaries, but I'd like to see him again.

Creep

There's nothing creepy about letting someone you fucked know you wanna fuck 'em again or, hey, maybe even date 'em for a while. It gets creepy only if they don't respond, or if they politely decline, and you keep letting them know you would like to fuck/date them some more.

You liked him, you had a nice time, the sex was good—and you left, stupidly, without his number for fear of looking clingy or uncool. Social media has come with costs—trolls, bullying, Donald Trump's Twitter feed—but the ability to locate someone and ask for a do-over/screw-over is one of the benefits. So look him up on Facebook or Instagram and send him a note. If you don't hear back, consider yourself swiped left and move on.
